From Dolphin:

December's LOAR gives us the defining instance of a Demon's skull. This is the defining instance of a demon's skull in Society armory. While demons are no longer acceptable as charges, per the Cover Letter of Aug 2011, demon's heads are still registerable - as recently as Feb 2012, in the device of Marek Viachedrago - from which this is a single step. A demon's skull is here defined to be a human skull with horns; fangs are optional. We will grant them no difference from unmodified human skulls.

There is also a defining instance of a dividing Iron. This is the defining instance of a dividing iron in Society armory. A dividing iron was a tool used by glaziers to cut stained glass pieces: the pointed tip was heated, then applied to the glass, which would crack and separate where the point touched. It's a period artifact, seen in the Ständebuch of Jost Amman, 1568, and therefore acceptable for Society use. We here define its default orientation with the handle to base, as in this submission.

There is also the defining instance of a caterpillar. This is the defining instance of a caterpillar in SCA heraldry. The caterpillar was known to period Europeans, and the submitter has supplied a depiction from Joris Hoefnagel, dated 1596. As the charge would be rendered unidentifiable if depicted tergiant, we include in the definition of caterpillars as charges the default posture of horizontal and in profile, with all feet down.

3: Caid, Kingdom of - New Badge Azure, four crescents conjoined in saltire, horns outward, within an arch argent

The badge is intended for the Crescent Artisan championship (generic name, not submitted).

This is clear of the Society's badge for the Office of Arts and Sciences (reg. March 1986 via Laurel), Azure, a candle enflamed within an arch stooped argent. Under the most stringent interpretation, we get a DC for type and a DC for number of central primary charge; in point of fact, SC should apply here.

This conflicts with the Populace Badge/Augmentation of arms/Ensign for the Kingdom of Caid for only one DC for the addition of the arch; however submitters are presumed to grant themselves permission to conflict by longstanding precedence.

BADGE approved and forwarded to Laurel.

Galen is the name by which a famous doctor of the Classical era was known, as well as an English masculine given name from 1619. In registering Galen of Black Diamond in Apr. 1996 (A-Atlantia), the LOAR stated:

The medical writings of Claudius Galenus, better known as Galen, were known in the Middle Ages, and there are a few examples of English use of Classical names c. 1200, so we are giving the name the benefit of the doubt.

Nyksdóttir is formed from the Norse masculine given found on Viking Answer Lady site as From OW.Norse nykr "nicor, nixie, water goblin." This name is also connected to Nukki and Nokki. Occurs in the runic nominative case form nukR. NR s.n. NykR, Nukki/Nokki Although this does have references to unusual powers it seems to have been used as a given name for humans

<http://www.vikinganswerlady.com/ONMensNames.shtml#n>

There is a SFPP for having charges on the field with a schneke; but we believe this is the only one. We don't believe there are multiple SFPP for using multiple charges.

There was some discussion regarding the use of a schneke issuing from the chief with a chief of the same color. The College was split on whether the combination is allowed. We defer to Laurel/Wreath on that decision.

8: Klaus Axelsson - Resub Household Name Clan of Gallow Glass

The submitter's original household name was returned on the Nov 2017 LoAR

Klaus Axelsson. Household name Clann Gallóglaiigh.

This household name must be returned because it does not match any documented pattern for naming households. The only evidence found to date for Gaelic clan names shows that they were created from given names or patronymic surnames. [June 2013 Cover Letter] As Gallóglaiigh is either an adjective or a descriptive surname, it cannot be used to form a clan name.

Clan is found in Alys article as a household designator in English from Alys's Simple Guide to Household Names <http://alysprojects.blogspot.com/2016/10/alyss-simple-guide-to-household-names.html>

In the same article

B. Household Names Based on Personal Names

Another common form of household name is based on the name of the individual owner, founder or inspiration. The exact form of such names depends on the language and culture in which it is created.

In English, we have documentation for forming household names based on given names, surnames or a person's full name.

Gallow is found as a late period surname in England from familysearch here used as a given name, per precedent.

de la Cruz is documented with 7 examples as a Spanish descriptive byname meaning "of the cross" examples include Isabel de la Cruz (1571, V.3150), María de la Cruz (1571, V.3150) (daughter and mother), Juana de la Cruz (1571, V.3247), Bartolomé de la Cruz (1574, V.3622), Fray Luis de la Cruz (1578, VI.12) "16th Century Spanish Names" by Elsbeth Anne Roth (Kathy Van Stone) found at <http://heraldry.sca.org/names/spanish/other-bynames-freq.html>

originally submitted with the byname Beytill The byname beytill was ruled unregistrable in Jan 2006, in the returned submission of Finnur beytill. The ban was confirmed in Sept 2009, in the returned submission of Wolfgar beytill. Submitter picked a different byname

Mjaðveig is a Norse feminine given name found on the Viking Answer lady site <http://www.vikinganswerlady.com/ONWomensNames.shtml#m> and was found in CV pp. 433, 690 s.v. mjodr, veig; NR s.v. -væig

"The first element Mjað- comes from the stem of Old Icelandic mjodr, genitive mjaðar, "mead, honey-wine". The second from the citation for Álmsveig The etymology of the second element -veig is unclear. It may derive from OW.Norse veig

"strong, powerful," which comes from Germanic *waizó, or it may instead come from OW.Norse víg "battle" and the OW.Norse adjective vígr "competent in battle, skilled with weapons". There is a slight possibility that -veig may instead be derived from OW.Norse vé "holy place" (compare with the Gothic adjective weihs "holy"). Cleasby-Vigfusson suggests a fourth possible derivation, from Old Icelandic veig, "a strong drink, alcoholic beverage" used of beer and the Mead of Poetry

Eyksdóttir is a Norse masculine given name found on the AnswerLady site Originally a by-name in West Scandinavia meaning "beast of burden, horse." Anglo-Scandinavian forms include the Latinized Aichus. FJ p. 77 s.n. Eykr <http://www.vikinganswerlady.com/ONMensNames.shtml#e>

DEVICE returned for redraw to fix the head posture.

12: Seraphina de Arlotto - Resub Device Per saltire azure and purpure, a wolf passant between three pairs of needles in saltire argent

The previous device submission, with the same design but with threaded needles, was returned on the LoAR of Jan 2011:

This device is returned because the secondary charges are not identifiable. Both commenters and those at the meeting were unable to identify the charges as pairs of threaded needles in saltire. Therefore, the device is in violation of section VIII.3 of the Rules for Submissions, which requires that items be "used in a design so as to preserve their individual identifiability."

On resubmission, please instruct the submitter that the portions of the field blazoned as azure need to be unmistakably azure. The tincture used on the forms blurs the distinction between azure and purple, which is also sufficient reason for return.

In this resubmission, the threads from the needles have been removed, making it clearer that these are sewing needles. As for coloration, the current forms were colored using Society-standard Crayola markers.

the same article states masculine names may be adding a or ah

The list of feminine given names is shorter than the list of men's given names. As is the case with many medieval societies, not many women were specifically named in period sources and references. However, many of the masculine given names can be feminized by the addition of "a" or "ah" to the end (for example, the masculine Khalid can be found feminized as Khalida(h))
