4: Corra Carrigan - New Name & New Device

Vert, on a pale between two roses slipped and leaved Or a serpent erect sable

The following changes are allowed: Spelling

Sound most important.

Language/Culture (Irish) most important.

Corra is a Gaelic masculine given name.

From JM "CELT shows the relevant quotation from The Annals of the Four Masters (<https://celt.ucc.ie/published/G100005D/>) as "& co n-deachaidh mac an Abaidh cona corugadh ceithirne budhdéin go Cluain Immurrois go baile An Giolla Bhuidhe Mic Maoil Corra go rucc orra annsin An Calbach mac Murchadha Uí Choncobhair" and translate that (<https://celt.ucc.ie/published/T100005D/>) as "and to the town of Gillaboy Mac Maoilcorra, where Calvagh, the son of Murrough O'Connor". This is the source Mari indicates as D. In her source Co, Annála Connacht (<https://celt.ucc.ie/published/G100011/>) the quote is " co bali in Gilla Bude Meic Maelcorra" which CELT translates (<https://celt.ucc.ie/published/T100011/>) as "to the house of Gilla Buide Mac Maelcorra".

CELT, "The Voyage of the Hui Corra" (<https://celt.ucc.ie/published/G303030/text001.html>) cites from a 15th C manuscript "Flathbrughaidh cétach comrumach rochineastar do cuigid Connacht .i. Conall Dercc ua Corra Fhind." The translation of the story is at <https://celt.ucc.ie/published/T303030.html>; "A princely landholder, hundreded, combative, was born, once upon a time, in the dear and beautiful province of Connaught, to wit, Conall the Red, descendant of Corra the Fair."

I think with the citations from Mari's article, this supports Corra as a masculine Gaelic name. It is probably in the nominative."

Carrigan - not found until 1690 Sent submitter multiple spelling options of Carrington.

12: Ryn Shiver Glades - Resub Device

Argent, pendant from the horns of an increscent purple two mullets of eight points sable

Device Return on the Oct 24 LoAR

Argent, pendant from the horns of an increscent purple two compass stars voided and interlaced sable This device is returned for violation of SENA A3C, which disallows voiding of secondary charges, aside from charges that are voided as part of their definition. By precedent, mullets of more than six points are too complex to be voided and interlaced as secondary charges [Ariel Lovechild, 11/2011, A-Ansteorra]. We direct Palimpsest to draft a Rules Letter to update SENA A3C to make this clear.

It is also returned for the use of compass stars voided and interlaced. The use of compass stars is a step from core practice. Modifying them by voiding and interlacing moves them even further from core practice, and they will not be registerable without documentation.

This design corrects the reasons for return.

16: Vladimir Kraskov - New Name & New Device

Per pale vert and sable, three skulls Or

Vladimir is a masculine Russian given name found as a header in Wickenden, which attests Vladimir Vsevolodovich from 1053.

Kraskov is a Russian patronymic from the given name Krasko (m) -- "beauty." Pats: Kraskov (Elia Kraskov, Nizhegorod warden). 1602. [RIB II 974-5]
<https://heraldry.sca.org/names/paul/kp.html>

From the July 2017 Cover Letter.

From Pelican: On Using Wickenden's A Dictionary of Period Russian Names (aka the Russian Names Database)

First, heralds and submitters must keep in mind that the Dictionary gives only the earliest dated instance of a particular name under the heading for that name. For example, although the male given name Nikita was used throughout the SCA's period, under the heading for Nikita, the Dictionary provides only a single example, dated to "before 1147." It is only by searching the Dictionary in its entirety that one finds later-dated examples of Nikita under different headings. Because only the earliest date is given for most names, we generally give submitters the benefit of the doubt that name elements found in the Dictionary are temporally compatible.
